"If Your Ancestor Owned Land, Then There's a Deed," by William Dollarhide

Dollarhide's Genealogy Rule #23: Locating the county where your ancestor lived is the first step in finding records about the time he was hauled into court for shooting his neighbor's dog, threatening the census taker with a shotgun, or making illegal corn whiskey behind the barn.

A 90-Percent Chance

Since the first colonists came to this continent, land ownership has always been an important part of our American society. As an example, nine out of ten adult white males in America owned land before 1850. Even today, the figure is more than 50 percent.

With this nearly universal coverage before 1850, and since genealogical research starts getting more difficult about that time, it's a wonder that family historians are not using land-ownership records more often to solve their genealogical puzzles.

For instance, did you know that there is a surname index to virtually every land owner in America since the early 1600s--an index that is more complete than any head-of-household census index ever compiled? And did you know that you have a 90-percent chance of finding your ancestor in that land-ownership index? The land-ownership index is not combined into a single name list. There are thousands of them. Usually called a "Grantee-Grantor" index, they can be found in the courthouse of any of the 3,141 counties in the U.S. Together, they comprise the largest index naming residents of the U.S., particularly for the period 1629 to 1860.

There are few indexes used by genealogists that offer a 90-percent chance of finding the right person. Even today, a modern telephone directory gives the names of only those households with a publicly listed telephone number. A recent study in Los Angeles County, California, for instance, revealed that about 20 percent of the telephone numbers are unlisted numbers. Yet there is a surname index for Los Angeles County that gives the names of 90 percent of the heads of household of that county during the 1850s and later.

Let's take the 1840 census as an example. In 1840, the names of the heads of household are all that are shown. But if you were to look at the Grantee/Grantor index for the same county, you may discover that one household could have more than one landowner. Say you find in the census that the head of household is John Smith, Jr. But what you don't know is that living in the same household is John Smith, Sr., and maybe even John Smith, III, and each of them owns a piece of property. Only John Smith, Jr. is listed in the 1840 head of household census, but the Grantee/Grantor index lists all three landowners.

We genealogists eventually recognize the significance of land ownership as we attempt to locate records of our ancestors. But, at first blush, we may not see the importance of land records because they do not seem to give us the vital genealogical facts we are after, i.e., names of parents, dates, children, and so on.

But genealogists who dig deeper into the land records will discover that land grants and deeds can provide evidence of the places where an ancestor lived and for how long, when he moved into or moved out of a county, and, in many cases, a surprising amount of detailed information about a person.

Why Land Records?

Here are three good reasons why land records are valuable for genealogical research:

- . The Odds Are Good. Since 90 percent of the adult white male population owned land before 1850, land grants and deeds provide an excellent way of finding an ancestor in local records. Deeds are recorded at the county level; when property is sold, a deed is recorded at the local courthouse. It is a protection to both buyer and seller that the land being transferred is properly recorded. There are exceptions, such as a deed held by a private party and never recorded--which is every title insurance agent's worst nightmare. But deeds are almost always recorded at the courthouse of the county in which the land is located.
- . Land Records Are More Complete than Other Records. Land records such as property tax lists, deeds and deed indexes, and the written transcripts of real estate transactions all go back further in time than any other type of record we use in genealogical research. The earliest records in Europe, other than those recorded for the royal courts, are land records. For example, the Domesday Books--which are property tax lists--were gathered for William the Conqueror in the 11th century, and they are the earliest English records in which a common farmer or tradesman may be listed by name. Certain Scandinavian land records date back to 950 AD. In America, land ownership has always been important, so much so that whenever a courthouse was destroyed by fire or natural disaster the deed records--proof of land ownership--were reconstructed by local authorities soon after. For example, deed records were reconstructed for several counties after General Sherman's troops burned courthouse after courthouse in the South during the Civil War.
- . Land Records Often Reveal the Name of a Man's Wife. The English common law system of "dower rights" for a widow was followed in the American colonies and continued into the 19th century. Dower rights entitled a widow to 1/3 of her husband's estate upon his death. No written will had to specify that amount. As a result of the dower rights of a married woman, early land deeds almost always mention the name of a man's wife because she had a legal interest in any land being sold or purchased. In fact, a woman had "veto power" over the sale of land by her husband. Under the English system, a married woman could not own land in her own name; but with her dower rights, she could veto the sale of the land. Many early deed transcripts will include an affidavit in which a wife was interviewed privately by the court clerk to determine whether or not she was in favor of the sale.

“Why is a Tobacco Break?”
Oxford Public Ledger October 10, 1914

Colonel G. E. Webb, editor of the Southern Tobacco Journal, explains a “tobacco break” in the last issue of his publication. Being an adept in the business, the Colonel’s views will no doubt be accepted without any further discussion. Here is what he has to say about it.

“Now comes a question to us that has been asked thousands of times. The writer wants to know “why is a tobacco break?” or why is a tobacco sale called a tobacco break. Well, here goes to the best of our ability. Away back years preceding the Civil War, tobacco was carried to the markets in hogsheads. The hogsheads were made heavy and substantial and at each end was fastened a sapling pole, making shafts for the horse. In this way tobacco was rolled to the nearest markets and in some convenient spot was broken open- hence comes the breaks.

“When tobacco was sold in this crude way, Fayetteville, NC was a great market, as also was Milton in Caswell County. At that time however but very little tobacco was raised in North Carolina and all of it was cured in the sun.”

Lemuel.

State of North Carolina
Granville County

In Equity
To March Term 1855

To the Honorable the Judge of the Court of Equity for the county aforesaid.

The petition of Elijah Currin, David Currin, Lemuel Currin, Mary Currin, James Elliott and Lucy Ann his wife and James David King an infant under the age of 21 years who appeared by his guardian and next friend John King, and John King, James Currin.

Respectfully showeth unto your worships that in the year 1844 one Lemuel Currin Sr. of the said county of Granville died having made and published his last will and testament that to the said will there was no executor, but that the widow of the said Lemuel, our Elizabeth Currin qualified as administratrix unto the will annexed. That in the said will the said Lemuel devised to his said wife the whole of his real estate, consisting of a tract of land situate in the county of Granville adjoining the lands of Henry Peace, Robert Hamilton, and others on Grassy Creek thtu his life or widowhood and at her death to be divided among all his children. as will more fully appears by reference to his said will a copy of which marked A is here unto filed and judged to be taken as part of this answer.

Petitioners further show that the said Lemuel Currin left him surviving your petitioners Elijah a son, David a son, Lemuel a son, James a son, Lucy Ann a daughter who intermarried with your petitioner James Elliott, Mary a daughter who intermarried with John King and has since died leaving her son and his petitioner James David King who is a minor-, and who are the devisees of the said Lemuel Currin decd.

Your petitioners would firmly show that by the terms of the said will the said lands were to be divided upon the death of the tenant for life the said Elizabeth and your petitioners would show to your honor that the said Elizabeth departed this life some time since leaving your petitioners tenants in common in for of the said lands.

Your petitioners would further show to your honor that they would be serously inconvenced ba a division of the said land by partition among the said tenants in common, there being seven slaves and the tract of land only containing some three hundred acres, and one of the said parts to wit James David King being a minor no sale can be made which would be rated without the said of this honor the court. Your petitioners would therefore pray your honor to decree that a sale be made of the said land and a division of the proceeds thereof among your petitioners as they may surally entitled. Your petitioners beleiving their interests would be mutually promoted thereof - on that your honor would make said order and further orders in the presence as to you may seem not and as in duty Court.

Slight Accident

Oxford Public Ledger October 10, 1914

Wednesday afternoon Mr William Burnett of Route 5 tied his horse hitched to his buggy in front of the colored barber shop and shortly afterwards Miss Katherine Lassiter drove in front of the First National Bank in her automobile and the breaks failing to grip good run into the buggy. The horse commenced kicking and by the time the machine stopped Miss Lassiter jumped out and grabbed the bridle and held him until some one come to her assistance. The only damage done was a broken shaft and a bent lamp, the horse received a slight wound on the leg as he kicked. The accident attracted quite a crowd as there was a large number of farmers in town selling tobacco.
